Who is Rick Ackerman?

For the last 20 years, Rick has been the editor and publisher of Rick's Picks, an online service geared to traders from novice to expert. Before that, his Black Box Forecasts provided technical forecasts for floor traders on the major exchanges. He has been trading himself for more than 40 years, including 12 as an options market-maker on the floor of Pacific Stock Exchange. CNBC and Bloomberg have featured his work, and he has written on the markets and the economy for numerous publications, including Barron's and The San Francisco Examiner.

A headline in Barron's labeled him an "intrepid trader" after he helped the FBI solve a notorious pill-tampering case. He received a $200,000 reward and a guest appearance on FBI: The Untold Story

In the trading world, Rick is known for the unusual accuracy of his price predictions and for the Hidden Pivot Method he uses to trade and forecast. His provocative insights and timely trading calls have made him a frequent guest on shows hosted by Max Keiser, Greg Hunter, Jim Goddard and Cory Fleck, among others. His thoughts on the markets and the headlines have also been featured on ZeroHedge, Seeking Alpha, Benzinga, The Daily Reckoning, FX Street, Financial Survival Network, Crush the Street, Jory Capital, Howe Street, Gold-Eagle.com, Goldseek.com, 321Gold.com and Kitco.

The Impulse Leg: A Simple, Powerful Tool

Is it possible to predict when a stock, commodity or option is about to change direction without ever being wrong? The answer is yes - provided you have the patience and diligence to remain alert when most other traders have nodded off. Using a simple indicator that you can learn in minutes, your forecasts can bat 1.000 for a whole season.

I call the indicator an "impulse leg," and if you look for it on charts of small degree, you will never be fooled when the trend changes. Once you've mastered this simple trick you'll have a better chance of profiting with it than traders who use far more sophisticated methods. They will be a few crucial steps behind you in spotting trend reversals.

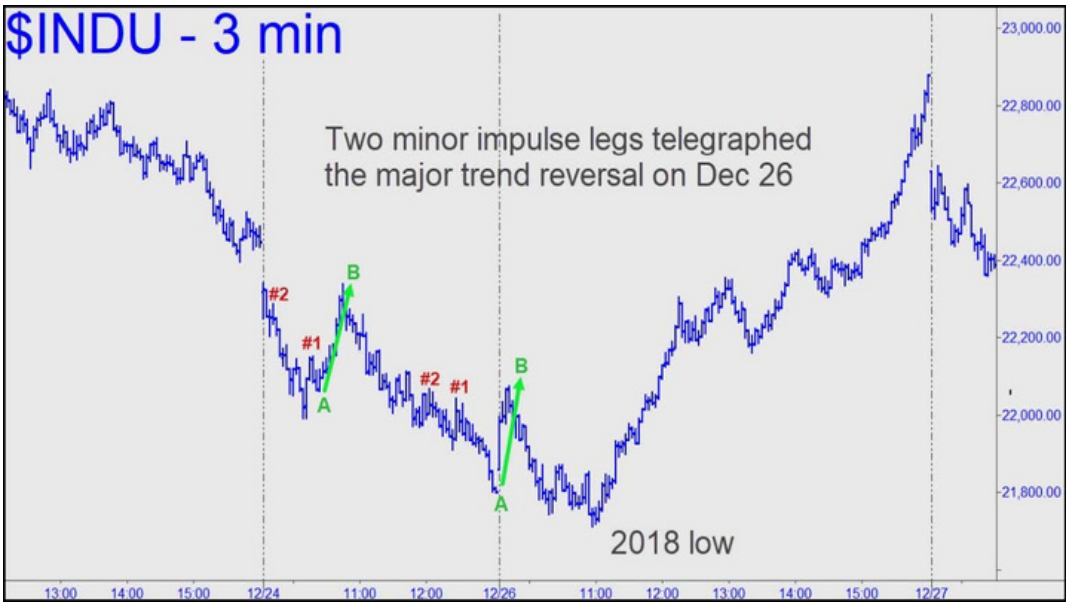

How It Works

Whenever a trend leg exceeds two prior peaks (or lows in downtrends) recorded in the opposite direction, it's signaling a trend reversal. You can see it in the chart below, which caught the December 2018 bottom:

The Dow stocks had fallen relentlessly in Q4. But if you'd been watching for the first hint of a turn, you'd have nailed it and gotten in near the bottom when the unbroken rally leg A-B surpassed peaks #1 and #2.

If you'd had the patience to watch for the reversal with a "magnifying glass," you could have gotten long almost risklessly a week earlier using the same indicator. Here's what the turn looked like on December 26, when it first became visible on the three-minute chart:

Creating 'Impulsive' Stops

That's all there is to it. With this indicator and a little diligence, it's possible to nail the exact top of a ten-year bull market. That's because every bear market in history has begun with a downtrending A-B impulse leg on the lesser charts.

You can also use the impulse leg to create a stop-loss that will allow you to exit a trade ahead of the stampede. Simply place the stop at whatever high or low would generate an impulse leg. If you want to put the trade on a hair-trigger, use the five-minute chart. If you don't want to be shaken out so easily, use an impulse leg on the hourly chart.
